Piran Consulting takes root in London City office

- Business relocates to heart of the City
- First-class facilities to support ambitious growth plans
- Positioned to support mobile, payments and identity clients

Piran Consulting Limited has opened a new facility in the heart of the City.

The move to Throgmorton Street follows the 2013 merging of Jam ICT and Piran Partners LLP to Piran Consulting, a business that is focused on enabling organisations to capitalise on the revenue streams that can be achieved by placing mobile technology at the heart of business strategy.

Previous satellite offices occupied by the respective businesses, pre-merger, have now been exited and the newly-formed consultancy given a common working base.

The choice of location provides easy access for its clients and excellent facilities. The management team believes the relocation is indicative of its growth ambitions and the emergence of Tech City.

Piran Chairman Andy Dewhurst said:

“Our business is developing rapidly as mobile becomes central to business strategy – and this move to the heartland of the financial services industry, close to the emerging technologies of Tech City, will give us an ideal platform from which to demonstrate our expertise and better serve our client base”

CEO Julian Sawyer added:

“Being close to our market in terms of location as well as expertise is critical to the future success of Piran Partners and this new facility will serve well as our business expands to meet the needs of our clients”
